The Greville Arms Hotel, Mullingar is one of the few surviving Irish Hotels visited by James Joyce and immortalised by him in his writings. In 'Stephens Hero' we discover Stephen Daedalus, who was seated in The Greville Arms Hotel, chaffing the barmaid who was indulging in 'flirty, gossipy conversation with the young men. She admires Stephen more than the others who responds by counting the buttons on the blouse, which reveals her 'very tempting figure'.
